

Key words: Sport, Violence, ethical values, terrorism, human right violation

INTRODUCTION

Sport is a global phenomenon which was formally started in ancient Greece along with the Olympic Games. The ancient Olympic Games were a preliminary stage of globalization of sport. People from throughout Greece were coming to the Olympic village during the Olympic game for their business and also used to watch the games (Kidd, 2013). Therefore, this was the start of cultural exchange and international business among different regions of Greece (Kidd, 2013). In the modern world, sport has stretched its wings in all the directions and throughout the global village. Now sport is being played in the global arena, the result of which is that the sport has associated with it many good as well as bad features. New technological advancements in sport are improving both physical (infrastructure, broadcasting, accuracy of judgements etc.) and human resources (player performance, low risk of injuries, better medical facilities etc.). Hence, every nation provides sport facilities to gain prestige, social rehabilitation, and monetary benefits. On the other hand, sport has commercialized with the globalization (professionalism). Although sport has become profit-oriented. Therefore, there have been violence and corruption. As far as violence is concerned, it is currently have different aspects in sport sector. Violence and violation are now treated to core values of sport as well as the sport culture.

In this research, first part will discuss the definition of violence, then ethical background of sport. The second part will demonstrate forms and causes and its effect on sport. In the third part, some solutions will be indicated which have been implemented by sport authorities. The final part will draw conclusions related to violence in sport.